Patron's Desk

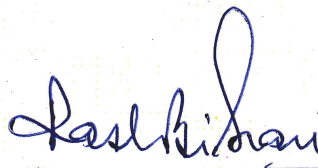

My association with the Department of Geography, Patna University has been for more than 5 decades. Many glorious occasions were enjoyed within the premises but the new generation of geographers of the Department are set to scale new heights in different fields of academia.

The resolution to publish online journal named "Geographical Studies and Development" is a long jump forward mission in the realm of geography. Although the 1st issue has only six research articles, it hardly matters. It is more important to see how are they qualitatively different from others and are capable to create pragmatic impact over students, teachers and researchers.

I am sure that the journal will receive global acceptability. All six papers are innovative in presentation and pragmatic on the ground.

I am really proud of the new corps of teachers and researchers. I hope that the online journal will receive warm response from readers and suggestions, if any, would be considered positively provided they are put to the scheme of the team management for quality enrichment of the journal.

I congratulate the Editor-in-Chief, other Editorial Board Members and papers contributors for being involved in the maiden appearance of the journal.
